Whether the [illegible] continues two years [illegible] Monthly [illegible] the lever that moved the world, and that is not going [illegible] power [illegible] take our quarrel their own; or to abide the [illegible] of this land fratricides at the North, [illegible] the world think the [illegible] be opened to every [illegible] The struggle [illegible] is known, the resources, money and [illegible] Despots say that two years [illegible] Shall Liberty Americans [illegible] which [illegible] has failed to [illegible] a peace. Neither party can long exist, and should both politicians and [illegible] sections and party hate prevail and the work of carnage be continued two years, longer than will be [illegible] conquering a peace then we never. We shall never subjugate the North and the North will never subjugate us. But what then, amidst the everlasting [illegible] are we looking? Do the ordinances of this damnable strife glory in the widow's [illegible] and delight to tread the gory field and trample under foot noble [illegible] which [illegible] hearts half broken to hear, that, against the [illegible] of helplessness and tenderness, treason [illegible] civilization and christianity, they should [illegible]

The parties who began this war must [illegible] it; and he who have had more than [illegible] the outer world if not the combatants themselves, that neither party can ever conquer a peace from the other, is it not time for other means to be tried? Stop fighting. Let the cannon be still, the people at home and the law-makers and law-givers in the cabinet and council chamber, have time to breathe. Let the whole people turn their thoughts from blood and carnage to the far greater glories of our [illegible] world. Stay the hand of destruction, for a season—give the brave men whose courage has immortalized them on the hundred fields [illegible] ghastly days furlough; and meantime let the interim be devoted by our statesmen, if we have any left, to negotiations for a settlement of these troubles. To this it must come at last and why not now? More blood will not make a settlement easier, but will [illegible] continuance of the war [illegible] either section. And then have this people—have upon this whole people—any right to erect a [illegible] for their children to dwell in a [illegible] which the civilized world now, and hereafter will condemn?

Blessed are the peace makers! Yes, blessed are those at all times who restore discordant masses to order and bring harmony out of confusion. Peace! How many prayers ascend daily to the Prince of Peace for this great boon! The aged mother whose heart-strings watch in the outer [illegible] prays for peace; the patient wife whose husband [illegible] left home, husband, loved ones and all at the call of duty, prays for peace; the fair maiden whose heart-idol, brother or father languishes from wounds or disease in a distant hospital, prays for peace; the hoary headed veteran [illegible] memory of the scenes of the last revolution is vivid and who gave up his children and children's children at the sound of the war trumpet, laboring upon the verge of the grave felt where eyes are gradually closing upon the beauties of this natural world, prays for peace; the prattling child who clings to its mother's knees, who could not [illegible] the weeping father when its paternal protector departed to the field at the call of his country, it, too, in all the fullness of purity and heavenly innocence, prays for peace. All God's people and the universal christian world join their heartfelt petitions to the Throne and swell the [illegible] Let the new ruling powers in all honest hearts [illegible] their Winter's Conference and implore the [illegible] of peace, and the Ruler of Nations and peoples, for [illegible]

Under our original system of government, where the rights of property and person, the freedom of speech and of the press were scrupulously observed, when every man, at home, there minded. They could vote, and speak; but now when there is no law but the will of the ruler and no power but that of the bayonet, the people have but little to do with their own destiny. The South wants peace, the North wants peace, and if left to the people they would have peace and be very particular as to terms so they were not degrading. This cannot can only be settled upon the basis of a separation. Upon this all are agreed save a few contemptible [illegible] who are as despicable as the miscreants who [illegible] on the cattle; but why not have that separation now? Ground prayers on both sides, leaving the cotton or gulf States to set up their government, and the New England States to set up theirs, and leave all other States to such choice as they may make. If Kentucky, Maryland and Missouri choose to go to New England and her Dictator, Lincoln, let them go; and if they decide to come to us and bring the great Northwest, the balance of power upon this continent, with them, let them do it. The country pants for peace and we demand peace—if not such a peace as we want, such a peace as we can get, guarded by those as forever from the 'tyranny of Lincoln and his Abolition faction—and we will guarantee [illegible] constitutional lines and settle boundary questions [illegible]

[illegible] to see [illegible] Neither government is likely to get all it desires in a settlement of these unfortunate [illegible] forgive and [illegible] forgiveness in our self-righteousness and [illegible] [illegible] for an unconditional [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
